Chamblin's coaching is the difference for Riders

CFL. Coach credited with club's perfect start

JEFF MACKEY
jeff.mackey@metronews.ca

In his first season as head coach of the Roughriders, Corey Chamblin has led the team to an impressive 3-0 start — a welcome contrast to last year's 0-3 start.

After taking the helm Chamblin made some big moves in the off-season, both on the field and on the sidelines. These moves are already paying dividends with regards to players like Kory Sheets, Brendon La-Batte and Odell Willis.

Chamblin has also managed to improve the play of veterans. After three games last year, Darian Durant had thrown three interceptions. So far this season, he hasn't thrown any.

"The coaching staff just puts me in great situations," said Durant. "Coach Chamblin talks to me all the time about just being a point guard, you know — take the pressure off myself and getting the ball to the open guys."

On the defensive side, the team is getting it done as well. So far in three games the defence has allowed 37 points, compared to the 114 it had allowed at this point last year.

The Riders will be taking on the Stampeders on Thursday in Calgary, where Chamblin will try to keep his perfect record intact.

Saskatchewan-Yukon relations strengthened with new accord

Mutal benefits.
Agreement will be in effect until 2017

JANE CAULFIELD
jane.caulfield@metronews.ca

The Saskatchewan government and the Yukon government have committed to working closely together in areas of mutual interest.

After signing an Intergovernmental Relations Accord July 16, Premier Brad Wall said while Saskatchewan and the Yukon have their own unique needs, working together will be rewarding for each province.

"There are great opportunities to co-operate for the benefit of our citizens when we have so much in common," Wall said in a press release.

Yukon Premier Darrell Pasloski said that the provinces have a lot in common, including economic growth and commitment to environmental responsibility. "Forging closer ties will support the ongoing success of our jurisdictions," Pasloski said.

Both premiers signed the accord while they were visiting the Pacific Northwest Economic Region Annual Summit in Saskatoon. The accord will be in effect until 2017.

- James Parker of the Saskatchewan Executive Council says the Yukon and Saskatchewan are looking to work together in a number of areas.
- Those areas include health care, environmental protection, education, literacy and skills training, and the sharing of innovation and research.
- Parker did say some initiatives have already started, but that nothing has been solidified as of yet.

RCMP 'not anticipating any problems' during Hells Angels Saskatoon run

A Hells Angels Canada run could bring upwards of 200 members of the club to Saskatoon, but Sgt. Paul Dawson, a spokesperson for the Saskatchewan RCMP, says the force is not too concerned about the upcoming event.

"This isn't a new thing — it happens every year in different locations and we're certainly not anticipating any problems," said Dawson. "Like any large group that comes to the province, we expect them to abide by the laws of the land and, particularly if they're travelling on the highways, we expect them to abide by the traffic laws as well."

The Saskatoon Police Service will ramp up its presence for the event, which takes place July 19 to 21, calling in agencies from across the country to assist. "We have ample numbers of police officers, both in plain clothes and in uniform, from a variety of police agencies from across Canada coming into town to make sure our officers are safe and the citizens are safe," said Kelsie Fraser, social-media and media-relations specialist with the SPS.

- Gatherings such as the upcoming Saskatoon run show strength and give Angels a chance to communicate face to face.
- Hells Angels have chapters in over 30 countries. Canada is home to 29 chapters.
- Saskatchewan has two chapters, one in Regina and one in Saskatoon.
- SPS says a heavy police presence and monitoring of the event will prevent any problems.

From dodging gopher holes to the international arena

KICKING IT UP A NOTCH FOR THE LONDON OLYMPICS

DORIAN GEIGER
dorian.geiger@metronews.ca

Soccer player Kaylyn Kyle remembers kicking a ball around while dodging mosquitoes and gopher holes as a kid in Saskatoon.

Now 23, Kyle is embarking on her most monumental journey yet — the summer Olympics in London. A native of Saskatoon, Kyle is elated about having the chance to represent Canada in the United Kingdom.

"I think I'm the luckiest girl in the world," she said in an email from Switzerland, where Team Canada is training before heading to London in a few days.

A former U of S Huskie and Bishop James Mahoney midfielder, Kyle plays for the Vancouver Whitecaps women's team, but she has not forgotten her Prairie roots, which she says helped forge her resilience as a professional soccer player.

"Not only do I get to represent my country, but also, every time I put on that jersey and listen to our national anthem I'm representing Saskatchewan and everyone who helped me get where I am today. It's something you can't buy and something I will never take for granted."

No place like home

"I always miss it, except for the cold winters."

Kaylyn Kyle, on being away from Saskatchewan

In her professional career, Kyle has competed in two FIFA U-20 Women's World Cups, travelling from Guadalajara, Mexico, to Moscow and Chile. The only thing she doesn't miss about Saskatchewan is the unforgiving winters.

"When you grow up in a place like Saskatchewan, it's hard not to miss it when you can barely go back. I have a lot of amazing friends and family there."

Apart from athletics, Kyle is a fashion enthusiast and hopes to get into fashion design after her professional soccer career.

Who are your favourite soccer players and team?
Lionel Messi and FC Barcelona, or Sergio Ramos and Real Madrid.

What's your favourite soccer movie?
Green Street Hooligans.

What's on your iPod?
I'm usually known for my Euro dance music, but I have a variety of mixes.

Since the Canadian men's soccer team failed to qualify for London, which men's team will you cheer for?
That's a tough one. I haven't even looked into the other teams that will be competing, but probably the U.K. men's team. It would be cool to win it on home soil.

Sisterly love helps propel Parker to London

PARKED IN THE INTERNATIONAL SOCCER LIMELIGHT

Preparing to compete at the London Olympics, Regina-born soccer player Kelly Parker has drawn inspiration from her twin sister, Alison.

"As kids we used to spend hours in the front yard playing soccer," Parker said on the telephone from Switzerland. "It would be dark and that would be the only way we would come in. She has also been one of my most amazing supporters."

Apart from representing Canada 15 times on the international stage, Parker, 31, has made a name for herself in U.S. soccer circles, too, playing with Atlanta Beat, F.C. Indiana and Buffalo Flash. But playing for the University of Texas in El Paso is what really stands out for Parker.

"I love El Paso and have a special place in my heart for it. It was more like Mexico than Texas. Our women's soccer team had two and three thousand people at our games."

Off on the right foot

"As kids we used to spend hours in the front yard playing soccer. It would be dark and that would be the only way we would come in."

Kelly Parker, on playing footie with her twin sister, Alison, while growing up in Regina

Parker and midfielder Kaylyn Kyle are the lone Saskatchewan players on Canada's team. Parker enjoys their Saskatchewan camaraderie.

"Saskatoon's not a huge soccer city and I knew her sister growing up," she said. "It's really cool. My family is coming to the Olympics and so is hers, so it's going to be a big Saskatoon party."

Since Parker's graduation from Evan Hardy Collegiate, women's soccer has ballooned in Saskatoon.

"It absolutely has. I don't get to go home that often, but Kaylyn and I always talk about how women's soccer has exploded in Saskatoon."

The Canadian women's team faces off against Japan in London on July 25.

How far can you kick a soccer ball?
In college I tried kicking field goals with a football and hit a 40-yarder. I tried it with a soccer ball and it was easier, so probably about 40 yards.

What's the craziest celebration you've done after scoring a goal?
I've been planning one. I'm not a prolific goal scorer but I might be saving the Tim Tebow for one of my goals. It could be controversial.

If you could steal one attribute from your twin sister, what would it be?
I would love to take her height. She has a couple of inches I could use.

Syria. Troops clash with rebels in Damascus

Intense clashes between Syrian rebels and government forces backed by helicopters spread to new areas of the capital Damascus Tuesday, including a brief firefight near Parliament. It was the third straight day of fighting that has posed an unprecedented challenge to government rule in the seat of President Bashar Assad's power.

The violence is the most widespread and sustained fighting in the capital since the Syrian uprising began 16 months ago.

Terrified families were fleeing the city or said they were prepared to leave at a moment's notice. Residents said they were packing "getaway bags" in case they had to run for their lives.

"My bag has my family's passports, our university degrees, some cash and medicine," said a 57-year-old father of two told The Associated Press, asking that his first name not be used for fear of reprisals. "It is very hard to imagine leaving your home and everything you worked to get, but it's a matter of life and death."

The clashes broke up quickly as the rebels fled, but were a significant indicator of the rapidly spreading violence and the deep reach of the rebels. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pakistan. WHO doctor working with anti-polio campaign hit by gunfire

Gunmen in the Pakistani city of Karachi opened fire Tuesday on a vehicle carrying a doctor working with the World Health Organization on an anti-polio campaign, wounding him in the stomach, the organization said.

The head of the World Health Organization's polio eradication program in Pakistan, Dr. Elias Durry, said the doctor is an international volunteer helping supervise the project. He said the man underwent surgery in Karachi.

Pakistan is in the middle of a campaign to vaccinate children under five. Taliban militants in northern Pakistan have barred the vaccination campaign from territory under their control, saying it can't go forward until the U.S. stops drone strikes.

In a statement, WHO said the attack did not appear to be specifically targeting the doctor.

"At this point, there is no evidence to suggest that this was a deliberate or targeted attack against polio eradication efforts or WHO," the Geneva-based organization said.

Pakistan is one of only three countries where the disease is endemic. The virus usually infects children living in unsanitary conditions, attacks the nerves and can kill or paralyze. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Draft feud divides Israel's coalition

Military. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu loses key Kadima Party votes

Opposition

"We are going back with our heads held high to lead the nation in the opposition."

Kadima Party leader Shaul Mofaz

Israel plunged toward a political crisis Tuesday after the largest member of the government quit, leaving Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in charge of a hard-line coalition opposed to most Mideast peace moves.

The moderate Kadima Party voted to pull out of the government just two months after joining. The move appeared to push the country closer to early elections, a scenario that would paralyze Mideast diplomacy for months.

Even if Netanyahu manages to hold the truncated coalition together, the sudden crisis has broader implications for Mideast peace, leaving him in charge of a narrow parliamentary majority dominated by religious and nationalist hardliners who oppose concessions to the Palestinians.

Kadima leader Shaul Mofaz had brought the party into the coalition to work with Netanyahu on ending a contentious, decades-old system that has granted draft exemptions to tens of thousands of ultra-Orthodox Jewish seminary students. But with a court-ordered Aug. 1 deadline looming, the sides were unable to forge a compromise.

Mofaz said he tried to forge a "new social contract," but was presented with "red lines" that couldn't be crossed.

Kadima is the largest party in Israel's parliament, winning one more seat than Netanyahu's Likud Party in the last election, but it was left outside the government when Netanyahu set up his original hard-line team.

The draft exemptions have caused widespread resentment among Israel's secular majority, who are required to perform two to three years of compulsory service. Ultra-Orthodox leaders have been equally adamant in their refusal to compromise, claiming their young men serve the nation through prayer and study. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Air force sex scandal goes to trial

A U.S. military jury Tuesday began hearing the case of an air force sergeant who faces the most serious charges in a widening sex scandal at the base where every American airman reports for basic training.

Staff Sgt. Luis Walker is among 12 instructors at Lackland Air Force Base in Texas who are being investigated, and faces the most serious charges — 28 counts, including rape, aggravated sexual contact and multiple counts of aggravated sexual assault. He could get up to life in prison and a dishonourable discharge if convicted.

Six of the 12 instructors under investigation face charges ranging from rape to adultery. At least 31 female trainees have been identified as victims.

The 10 female recruits Walker is accused of either sexually assaulting or engaging in inappropriate sexual conduct with are expected to testify.

Major Naomi Dennis, one of Walker's attorneys, told jurors there is no evidence to substantiate the charges against Walker and suggested to jurors that the women may have made up the charges. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Again! Another brazen mass shooting inflames Toronto

Two dead, 21 sent to hospital. Horror comes to a crowded block party just weeks after a mall shooting left the city reeling

Neighbours watch as police investigate at the shooting scene Tuesday. AARON VINCENT ELKAIM/THE CANADIAN PRESS

A mass shooting left Canada's biggest city in shock Tuesday.

The searing hail of bullets at a Toronto neighbourhood block party killed two people and sent 21 others to hospital, including a 22-month-old toddler.

One of the two people killed was identified as 14-year-old Shyanne Charles of Toronto.

The other was 23-year-old Joshua Yasay of Ajax.

Police say it's the worst gun violence in the city's recent history — and they believe it was gang related.

More grimly, they suspect deadly retaliation to take place and were sending reinforcements to the racially diverse area Tuesday.

More than 200 people were at the barbecue party in the city's east end Monday night when gunmen sprayed the crowd with bullets.

The street was still strewn with empty water bottles and other remnants of the party on Tuesday, as swaths of police tape surrounded the area.

Shannon Longshaw said the party, which she helped organize, started as an afternoon barbecue for neighbourhood kids.

But even as the crowd grew later in the day, she said the festivities stayed friendly — until shots suddenly rang out.

"There was no fighting, nobody got into an altercation, none of that," she said Tuesday morning, after spending much of the night being questioned by officers.

Bruce Strachan has lived in the area his whole life, but said he's now thinking of moving away.

"This is shocking," he said, watching police comb over the scene.

"I've got my two granddaughters living with me here. I brought them up from Trinidad to be safe from this type of violence and it's right around my corner."

Tears shone in one man's eyes as he said: "I saw people running, I heard 'crack, crack' and I hit the ground.

"It was like a Quentin Tarantino movie."

Mayor Rob Ford called it a "horrible tragedy" but added: "I know this is the safest city in the world. I've always said that, I truly believe it.

"Everyone has to move on and carry on with their life."

Police Chief Bill Blair said police have received "some co-operation" from witnesses, and called on all community members who attended the party to help with the investigation.

"I'm here today to make an appeal through you all, to the many hundreds of people who were present at the event yesterday who may have some information relevant to this investigation to come forward," Blair said.

"We are very concerned not only with the quick resolution and solving of this crime but the potential for retaliatory violence."

Messages of grief quickly appeared on social media.

"The hood gained another angel to look over us, RIP," one person wrote on Twitter.

The shooting came just weeks after a gunman opened fire in a crowded food court at Toronto's Eaton Centre. One man was killed instantly, another died of his injuries.

Activists angered. Scouts in U.S. keep ban on gays

After a confidential two-year review, the Boy Scouts of America on Tuesday emphatically reaffirmed its policy of excluding gays.

The Scouts cited support from parents as a key reason for keeping the policy and expressed hope the prolonged debate over it might subside.

Bitter reactions from gay-rights activists suggested that was unlikely.

The Scouts' national spokesperson, Deron Smith, said an 11-member special committee decided the exclusion policy "is absolutely the best policy" for the 112-year-old organization.

The Scouts' chief executive, Bob Mazzuca, contended most Scout families support the policy, which applies to both adult leaders and Scouts.

But the president of the largest U.S. gay-rights group, Chad Griffin of the Human Rights Campaign, called the Scouts' decision "a missed opportunity of colossal proportions."

"With the country moving toward inclusion, the leaders of the Boy Scouts of America have instead sent a message to young people that only some of them are valued," he said.

"They've chosen to teach division and intolerance."

Canadian credit card users may face higher costs

Extra fees. Canadian retailers currently absorbing transaction charges when customers use their Visa or MasterCard

Canadian shoppers who use credit cards may soon find themselves slapped with extra fees, if retailers win a fight against being stuck with transaction charges from Visa and MasterCard.

Retail organizations renewed their calls Tuesday for Ottawa to loosen credit card regulations following a landmark ruling south of the border that could have implications for a case that will be decided by a federal tribunal later this year.

Last week, a landmark settlement in the United States between Visa, MasterCard and merchants thrust the debate back into the spotlight in Canada.

The two credit card companies, as well as several major banks, reached an agreement to pay U.S. retailers at least $6 billion US to settle a long-running lawsuit that alleged the card issuers conspired to fix the fees that stores pay to accept credit cards.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB), which has more than 100,000 member businesses across Canada, is calling for changes to the federally regulated code of conduct that would allow retailers more rights, including the ability to make credit card users pay a surcharge or refuse credit cards at their stores.

The CFIB wants merchants to have the ability to add surcharges on credit card users that would counteract the transaction fees charged by some credit card companies

Competition Bureau

- The Competition Bureau argues that restrictive contracts by Visa and MasterCard allow the two credit card companies — which represent 92 per cent of the market — to essentially dictate terms to merchants.
- The tribunal has the power to force credit card companies to change their operations, but it cannot levy a monetary penalty in the case. A decision is expected later this year.

Currently Visa and MasterCard rules state that merchants cannot levy any surcharges on credit card users, forcing retailers to absorb the cost of usage themselves.

Debt. Higher interest rate would be trouble for many Canadians: Survey

Canadians who are worried about the amount of interest they pay for borrowing money could be relieved to hear the central bank decided Tuesday to keep its benchmark rate at a relatively low level of one per cent until at least the fall.

But a recent survey, which found a significant interest rate hike would pose a challenge to nearly half of those polled, highlights the need for better financial literacy.

Of the 1,000 Canadians randomly sampled by Harris Decima via telephone, 48 per cent of them said a significant interest rake hike would make it difficult for them to keep up with mortgage or debt payments.

By the numbers

48%

48 per cent of the 1,000 Canadians sampled for the survey said a rate hike would make it difficult to keep up with payments.

The study came out as the Bank of Canada announced Tuesday that it will keep its key interest rates low at least until the next policy meeting in September.

The survey, commissioned by the CICA, found that roughly 60 per cent of those surveyed save less than 10 per cent of their monthly income.

Yahoo CEO's pregnancy reignites debate

"Another piece of good news today," tweeted the expectant mom, announcing to her online followers that she and her husband are expecting a baby boy.

But this wasn't just any excited mom-to-be. This was 37-year-old Marissa Mayer, the newly named CEO of Yahoo — obviously a huge achievement for anyone, but especially for a woman in the male-dominated tech industry. And she was about six months pregnant, to boot.

Was it a watershed moment in the perennial debate over whether women can "have it all," with the pendulum swinging happily in the positive direction?

Or was it, as some claimed in the inevitable back-and-forth on Twitter, actually a development that would increase pressure on other working moms, who might not have nearly the resources that Mayer does, in terms of wealth, power, talent and flexibility on the job?

Or was it even sexist to raise the question at all? Would anyone be saying anything if the new Yahoo CEO were an expectant father?

What was clear was that Mayer's situation as a pregnant CEO of a Fortune 500 company is not only rare, but probably unique. She becomes only the 20th current female CEO of a Fortune 500 company, according to Catalyst, an organization that tracks women's advancement in the workplace. If it sounds like a lot, it's not; that's only four per cent of Fortune 500 chiefs.

Even a cursory look at the other current female Fortune 500 CEOs shows that the vast majority are well into their 50s, and thus presumably well out of maternity-leave territory.

Let the bells ring out! Let the banners fly!

It's the 75th anniversary of Spam, the canned lunch meat that tastes like dog food. (Quickly, lest the Hormel people get offended, we're talking high-quality dog food.)

Back in the dietary Dark Ages, I literally grew up on the stuff and its legion of imitators (Spork, etc.). The gelatinous goop that came with it made me gag, but vapourized nicely when the Spam was fried, and fried Spam and fried eggs with fried potatoes was a common staple, along with anything else that could be fried.

Too often around our house, it resembled that legendary Monty Python sketch set at the Green Midget Café, where all the dishes came with Spam (e.g. Spam, Spam, Spam, Spam, egg and Spam), prompting an outraged customer to ask: "Don't you have anything without Spam in it?" while a band of Vikings belted out a rousing chorus of "Spam! Spam! Spam! Wonderful Spam!"

Made from ...

"Of course, classic Spam is allegedly composed of pork shoulder and ham, heavy on the shoulder, light on the ham."

Not sure how the Vikings ended up in a sketch about Spam.... Oh, those Monty Python guys.

If you have a tender tummy, you might want to skip over this next bit. Spam now comes in 13 varieties, including jalapeno, cheese, hickory smoke and, for a limited time (to celebrate the Broadway opening of Spamalot), golden honey grail and stinky French garlic.

Of course, classic Spam is allegedly composed of pork shoulder and ham, heavy on the shoulder, light on the ham. It was launched to a hungry, Depression-rattled nation on July 5, 1937, and since then more cans of Spam have been sold than there are people on Earth. That's a lot, more than seven billion and counting. If you slice it thin, you can feed a horde of Vikings on a single can, which retails for an average price of $2.97. Just add Kraft Dinner, spread ketchup over the whole thing and bon appétit!

While fastidious vegan locavores may turn up their noses, people in Guam can't get enough Spam, consuming more than 16 cans per person per year, according to that estimable journal of record, Time magazine. Sadly, 60 per cent of deaths in Guam are directly attributable to poor diet and lifestyle. Score one for fastidious vegan locavores.

For those who can't get enough of this stuff, there's the annual Spam Jam in Honolulu, another Spam hotspot. The 10th annual edition was held on April 28, where aficionados chowed down on Spam-fried rice loco moco or Spam nachos at Jimmy Buffett's.

Hey, it's a lifestyle. Just not a long one.

Simpsons coming to Springfield?

A businessman in Springfield, Ore., says it's time for the city to embrace its most famous fictional residents and create a shopping district with a Simpsons theme. Jack Koehler owns Sweety's Frozen Yogurt, and he says business has been up since he put a set of Simpson statues in front of his store. He thinks the city should get involved, and he's proposing that a few blocks of downtown Springfield be turned into a Simpsons-themed shopping district. The city's community relations manager, Niel Laudati, tells KVAL there's no demand from the public, and he doubts anyone wants to spend tax dollars to license cartoon characters. But Laudati says the city would get behind the idea if it would benefit downtown and if other business owners and the community supported it.

Dark Knight on the rise. It hasn't always been box office brilliance as Metro looks at the Caped Crusader's past

scene@metronews.ca

Sometimes even villains get a second chance. The Dark Knight Rises, the last entry in Christopher Nolan's epic Batman trilogy, digs deep into Caped Crusader lore to reintroduce brawny bad guy Bane.

The abnormally strong antihero first appeared in the comics in 1993 but after a ridiculous appearance in Batman & Robin earned the title as the worst onscreen Batman baddie. As a scrawny convict pumped up by a drug known as Venom, he did little except growl and act as the punch line for a bad joke by his creator Dr. Jason Woodrue. "I call this little number Bane," he says. "Bane of humanity!"

The movie killed the Batman franchise for seven years, and it looked like Bane, played by wrestler Jeep Swenson — Holy haberdashery, Batman who chose his bad lucha libre mask? — would also be relegated to the big scoundrel cemetery in the Sky.

Then Nolan cast Tom Hardy, got rid of the ridiculous mask and gave the brute a second chance. So Bane is back and super-evil, but how do other Batman big-screen baddies stack up on the Batscale of finest to vilest?

The Bat's Best

Cesar Romero and Jack Nicholson both played The Joker, Batman's arch nemesis, but Heath Ledger's Oscar-winning take on the psychotic clown in The Dark Knight is the most menacingly memorable.

Burgess Meredith made The Penguin's trademark squawking voice popular, but it was Danny DeVito in Batman Returns who really showed what a megalomaniacal monster he really was.

"You're just jealous because I'm a genuine freak and you have to wear a mask," he said. Batman has battled plenty of female foes but feline fiend Catwoman is the pick of the litter. Whether it's Lee Meriwether meowing, "You're going to see the purr-fect crime, when I get Batman in my claws," or Michelle Pfeiffer wielding a 12-foot bullwhip, the creepy kitty is fun enough for nine lifetimes.

The Winged-One's Worst:

Too many one-liners from Two-Face in Batman Forever left critics unable to turn the other cheek after Tommy Lee Jones's over-the-top performance. As played by Uma Thurman in Batman & Robin botanist-turned-eco-terrorist Poison Ivy proved that not even Mother Nature gets it right every time.

If for no other reason than the joke "Ice to see you!" Batman & Robin's cold-blooded killer Mr. Freeze (Arnold Schwarzenegger) makes the worst-of list. The Governator should've been sent to the cooler for his line-readings in this one.

Hannah Montana & Miley Cyrus: Best of Both Worlds Concert Tour (2008)

Most ridiculous part: A father with two daughters wears a platinum Hannah Montana wig and says, "I didn't expect so much screaming." A 14-second screaming montage follows.

Song that's just as good or better than the original: Miley Cyrus (as herself) performs The Best of Both Worlds — the theme to her TV show — along with her alter ego, Hannah Montana, who is digitally rendered on a large screen. It's surprisingly moving.

Part where the artist seems most human: When Miley Cyrus is dropped during a stunt at one of the shows and voices her concern later in practice, the viewer realizes that at the start of her Best of Both Worlds Tour, Cyrus was only a 14-year-old girl on a 54-city tour of the U.S.

Jonas Brothers: The 3D Concert Experience (2009)

Most ridiculous part: In the opening scene, the band's van gets stuck in traffic on the way to the Today show in New York City. Within seconds, the JoBros are mobbed by a mass of screaming teenage girls.

Song that's just as good or better than the original: During That's Just the Way We Roll, the first live song in the film, the band is aided by an orchestra and some intense pyrotechnics in front of a sold-out crowd.

Part where the artist seems most human: After bodyguard "Big Rob" Feggans wakes up the brothers at 4:30 a.m., they eat breakfast together in their hotel room. Joe Jonas starts to shake the table while yelling, "Earthquake!" It initiates some good-natured ribbing among the three brothers.

Justin Bieber: Never Say Never (2011)

Most ridiculous part: Bieber grew up playing drums, and in a home video (in which he wears his trademark backwards fitted hat), he throws down a sick beat.

Song that's just as good or better than the original: When he performs One Less Lonely Girl, Bieber's staff brings one girl from the crowd onstage. Once in front of the crowd, the Biebs serenades the girl while gently caressing her. At the end, he gives her a bouquet of flowers. Aww.

Part where the artist seems most human: Home footage seems to serve as the harbinger of Bieber's musical career — as a toddler he effortlessly lays down a beat on a conga drum and strums a guitar that is much too large for his tiny frame.

Katy Perry: Part of Me (2012)

Most ridiculous part: Katy Perry's older sister makes an appearance as Perry's nerdy alter ego, Kathy Beth Terry — complete with headgear and braces — from the video for Last Friday Night (T.G.I.F.).

Song that's just as good or better than the original: Katy Perry runs through numerous costume changes throughout a performance of Hot N Cold. This occurs on a colourful, Candy Land-esque stage that might give you a cavity just by looking at it.

Part where the artist seems most human: Perry struggles with the decision to perform or cancel a gig in front of her largest crowd in Brazil while in the midst of a breakdown due to her divorce.

Leading man. Nathan Fillion chats about career struggles, and the man who gave him his big break

scene@metronews.ca

Nathan Fillion's life changed the day he was cast as Captain Malcolm Reynolds in the cult space-western series Firefly, written and directed by Joss Whedon (The Avengers).

Today, Fillion, star of the TV series Castle, would like to thank Whedon ... for everything.

"Firefly was the most favourite job I ever had, I truly loved it. It was every dream come true. It changed me as a person; how I work and the kind of work I do. I feel stupid considering how emotional I get about it."

But when the show was prematurely cancelled, Fillion wasn't ready for it.

"I didn't see it coming. I'd fallen in love with it so it was like being broken up with the best girlfriend you've ever had. I was depressed and the only comfort I found was in chocolate ice cream. I put on 20 pounds and it wasn't pretty."

Thankfully, just two years later, Fillion was offered the lead in Serenity, a film based on Firefly. Yet another dream was coming true.

"I find it very difficult wishing for more because I got everything I wanted. I got the lead in a film and I was getting Firefly back in the biggest possible way."

Whatever Whedon asks for, Fillion does. "I have a rule: every time Joss calls me to say, 'let's do this project,' I'll do it. He's done more for me singlehandedly than anyone else. I've had more success with Castle than I dared to dream of and I wouldn't have had it had it not been for Joss, because no one would hire me for a lead role. No one would give me a chance to prove myself. But Joss was that guy."

Following the box office success of Whedon's latest venture, The Avengers, can we expect a Captain Reynolds comeback?

"Joss changed my life, so I could never look at him and say 'more.' The most important thing is that people now know how clever he is. I find it very vindicating that everyone, not just his fans, knows this."

But let's shift our focus over to Fillion's current role in ABC's comedy series Castle, where he plays Richard Castle, a mystery novelist helping the NYPD solve unusual crimes.

So has he managed to pick up any good detective skills from the show? Apparently not. "Me, Nathan Fillion, solving crimes? I'm not very bright so no, a lot of murderers would get away."

Actor Nathan Fillion plays Richard Castle in ABC'S Castle, which airs on CTV.

In a short video titled An Indecent Proposal, Silverman — in her trademark cereal-stained hoodie and last-night's ponytail — attempts to persuade billionaire casino magnate Sheldon Adelson to cancel his $100 million check to Mitt Romney.

"If you give that $100 million to Obama instead of Romney, I will — well, I won't have sex with you because we're not married and I'm a nice girl, but I will 'scissor' you wearing a bikini bottom through to fruition," she says.

"You'll be the only elderly billionaire on the block to have traditional lesbian sex through to climax with a girl who had her own show on Comedy Central."

Hudson River Park: A destination for recreation

Urban oasis. A group of dedicated New Yorkers have turned a once-derelict patch of Manhattan into a place for outdoor fun

In the past decade, the decrepit piers and industrial zones along eight kilometres of the Hudson River on Manhattan's West Side have been utterly transformed.

Hudson River Park is now a destination that gets 17 million visits annually, with a bike path, green spaces, playgrounds and recreation ranging from mini-golf and skateboarding to kayaking and even stand-up paddleboarding. Melissa Lopez rented a bike a few weeks ago and was amazed at what she saw as she rode downtown through the park.

"It was gorgeous, like a little nature haven, beautiful flowers, trees, and only when you looked over to your left (at the buildings), did you realize you were in between a concrete jungle and this beautiful river," said Lopez, 29, who came in from her home in suburban Westchester for the day. "Everyone was doing something active — sunbathing, rollerblading, bike riding. There was one pier with a volleyball court with sand. I kept asking my boyfriend, 'Are we really in New York City?"'

Lopez's reaction is proof of just how much things have changed along the river. For much of New York City's history, "the waterfront was where the industrial areas were," said Madelyn Wils, president and CEO of the Hudson River Park Trust. "Then in the 1960s, the port business went away and the waterfront areas became so derelict they were an embarrassment. If you saw pictures of what this looked like even 10 years ago, you'd say, 'How could anyone let that happen?"'

Looking at the ribbon of spotless walkways, plantings and creative play areas along the river today between Battery Park City in Lower Manhattan and 59th Street, it's hard to imagine what Wils is describing.

But when she and other New Yorkers began working to create the park in the late 1990s, one of her goals as a mother of three living in Lower Manhattan was simply to make more places where kids could play. In 1998, the city and state provided land for the park, and construction began in 2001.

Last year's opening of Pier 25 in Tribeca, now one of the park's most popular areas with mini-golf and volleyball, was a crowning achievement.

There are still small sections along the water awaiting redevelopment — a pound for towed cars, a facility for Sanitation Department trucks — but the walkways and bike path are uninterrupted. (Wils says the park has "more bikes on the bike paths than anywhere else in the country — 6 million a year.") Between playgrounds, lawns, sports facilities, boating options and other amenities, the park's attractions number in the dozens.

"There are so many different boating opportunities in the park now," said Nancy Brous, metropolitan region director for the Hudson River Watertrail. Many of the programs are run by volunteers to educate New Yorkers who may never have been in a kayak or out on the river before, Brous said, but the walk-up kayaking programs also get "a lot of out-of-town visitors. This is something that's really going to be driving the tourist trade as time goes on and more people seek it out."

Another aspect of the recreational boating programs is teaching the public about the river. It's a tidal estuary, so the currents are strong, and the water can be murky as the tidal flow stirs up silt. "It's not crystal clear and you can't see that deep into it, but it's not pollution," Brous said. "People are very surprised when they learn about the water quality. Just by the birds you can tell it's clean — they're out there and they're catching fish."

Hudson River Park is also home to historic vessels that can be toured; public art like the AIDS memorial at 11th Street; yoga and other fitness programs; concerts, walks and talks, including a Sunday morning nature tour where participants learn about the park's 85 species of birds. Little wonder the park has started turning up in travel guides to New York City as an option for visitors looking for something to do besides shopping, theatre and museums.

New Yorkers embracing ferry life

More than one million passengers have ridden ferries across the East River since the service was launched just over one year ago, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg said Monday. That's more than double in initial projection of 409,000 riders, Bloomberg said as he and City Council Speaker Christine Quinn rode the ferry from North Williamsburg in Brooklyn to Pier 11 in lower Manhattan to mark the milestone. The ferries, which make it fast and easy to reach waterfront businesses, parks and other locations, are popular with tourists as well as locals. The service was launched June 13, 2011 as a three-year pilot program. Boats sail from several Brooklyn and Queens locations to East 34th Street and Pier 11 in Manhattan. There is also weekend service to Governor's Island in the summer. They said the city will conduct a passenger survey on board the ferry, online and via telephone in order to improve service further. "Using our waterways as transportation corridors makes for a greener and more livable city and knits together rapidly growing neighbourhoods in new ways," Bloomberg said.

My favourite Canadian spot is Churchill, Man. I have been going there for years, for all sorts of reasons — ranging from personal trips, to program awareness building for Polar Bear International.

I have also gone to the region for a discovery voyage regarding my ancestors who used to run the land up at York Factory, the very origin of The Trade.

It is an adventure in the summer — you must have a rifle nearby, the polar bears roam about ... the belugas are feeding in the bay, it is beyond magical.

This remote place offers true solace ... I find myself totally offline, and reconnected — to nature and humans ... everyone up there seems to be there for the same reasons ... it's the ultimate escape into "like-minds" or parallel intentions. Especially in Churchill in the winter, when it can get brutally cold, I feel like it's a true bonding experience with the other people up there.

The food is unexpectedly sophisticated and delicious, perhaps to completely blow away the common tourist, not sure ... but it's ridiculous.

Putting hot rocks in your mitts and boots, sitting by the fire with hot chocolate after a dogsled run ... or hanging on the tundra buggy for hours on end watching the polar bears in the behaviour patterns ... it is beyond any other experience I have had.

Every time I go, I truly feel like it's the first time back.

The combined flavours of bok choy, mushrooms and this sesame sauce is outstanding.

I use whole oyster mushrooms for appearance as well as texture. Feel free to substitute other mushrooms, but it is best to slice them in large pieces.

I love to serve this alongside a fish or chicken dish.

1. Combine the soy sauce, sesame oil, oyster sauce, sugar, garlic, ginger and chili sauce in a small bowl and set aside.

2. Lightly coat a large, nonstick skillet with cooking spray, add the oil and set over medium-high heat. Add the mushrooms and sauté for 5 minutes or until tender. Add the sauce and cook for 2 minutes, until slightly thickened.

3. Place a shallow layer of water in a large saucepan and bring to a boil. Place the bok choy in the saucepan, cover and cook for 2 minutes or just until it is bright green.

4. Drain well and place on a serving dish. Top with the sautéed mushrooms and sesame sauce, sprinkle with sesame seeds and serve immediately. ROSE REISMAN'S FAMILY FAVORITES (WHITECAP BOOKS)

Paper Clip Pork: One family's take on a Chinese BBQ staple

Chinese barbecue pork, or "char siu" in Cantonese, is a standard item found in every Chinese deli and restaurant. Not so traditional is one family's rather unique way of making it — with paper clips.

And the credit goes to uncle, Kin Woo. When he was a college student, he wanted to experiment with making traditional char siu. He says that "in the old days" in China, people would cook the pork in a clay or brick oven with a wood or charcoal fire underneath.

There were bars inside the oven with metal hooks that held the meat over the heat.

So one day, as family lore has it, he started fooling around with a paper clip. When he bent both ends into an S-shape, he discovered the perfect hook. And so the paper clips have been a trademark of his char siu for more than 30 years.

Ingredients

- 3- to 4-lb pork shoulder butt roast
- 8.5-oz jar hoisin sauce
- 1 cup white wine
- 1/3 cup of sugar
- 1 tbsp hot sauce
- 2 tsp kosher salt
- 24 large paper clips

This recipe serves six. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

1. Cut pork lengthwise into 6 thick slabs. Cut each slab into 4 strips. Set aside.

2. In bowl, combine hoisin, wine, sugar, hot sauce and salt. Mix well until the sugar has dissolved. Add sliced pork and mix to ensure all of the meat is evenly coated. Cover and refrigerate for at least 24 hours.

3. When ready to cook, set one oven rack at the highest point. Remove the remaining racks. Heat the oven to 400 F.

4. Remove pork from refrigerator. Bend each paper clip, opening it to create a double-sided hook that resembles an S. One at a time, thread one side of a paper clip hook through one of the narrow ends of each strip of meat. If you hold one up by the paper clip, the meat should hang down vertically.

5. Open oven and, using oven mitt, pull rack forward. Set a rimmed baking sheet lined with foil under it (it will rest on the door for the moment).

6. One at a time, use paper clips to hook pork onto the oven rack so they hang down from rack's underside. When all meat is hung, push rack and rimmed baking sheet into the oven. Roast 45 minutes. When meat is cooked, carefully unhook and remove paper clips before serving.

The basics

Ever heard of good debt?

Yes, it's an oxymoron, strange and it seems mythical at best, but believe it or not there are some things out there worth owing money for.

Here's what's on the "good" list:

- Your home
- Your own business
- Your education

These are otherwise known as things that will increase in value over time and give you the best bang for your borrowed buck. Because you're borrowing to finance things that won't lose their value (and will actually earn you money in the long-run), this kind of debt is considered good and justifiable.

Bad debt, on the other hand, is money borrowed for things that will depreciate in value over time, sometimes even instantly (think: as soon as you leave the store!). Consumable goods like clothes, cars, video games and flat-screen TVs are expendables, as are pricey out-of-town trips you can't afford.

Apply yourself! Scholarships and bursaries can help to ease the strain of student debt. ISTOCK

Left unmanaged, this kind of debt could leave you facing years — even decades — of loan payback ahead.

And the worst "bad" debt you can make? Credit card debt, since it usually carries the highest interest rates and the most onerous payback schedules out there.

Education gives back

Student loans — burden-Canadians. In other words, government-backed student loans not only increase your future earning potential, they also give you a tax credit on the interest portion of the amount paid on your loan each year.

Check before cheque

Do your research

- It's important to note that the guidelines for a Canada Student Loan (CSL) vary from province to province, and the amount each student is granted depends on a lot of different factors.
- Doing your due diligence by visiting the National Student Loans Service Center's (NSLSC) website and CanLearn will help, as will considering other loan options like a low-interest line of credit from your local bank.

Summer fun vs. summer funds

To the beach or the bank? How to save the money you make at your summer job

SAMANTHA SIM
TalentEgg.ca

For students, summer is a time to kick back, relax and enjoy the few months they don't have to study. But as the temperature rises so does the spending on social activities, which can eat away at money saved for the upcoming school year. So what can students do to help better balance their saving and spending this summer?

TD Canada Trust spokesperson Michelle Snow, group product manager for Everyday Banking, says the biggest financial mistake she sees students make is a complete lack of planning. "A lot of times it's just a complete lack of money-management altogether," she says. "They just live life as it goes by and don't plan."

Snow recommends three steps students should follow when managing their money this summer:

Plan Students should plan for their expected expenses (school, living costs and social life) and revenues (summer job, scholarships/bursaries, loans and parents). "Remember to pay yourself first," says Snow. "TD has a pre-authorized transfer service (PTS) that automatically moves a pre-set amount from your chequing to savings each time you're paid."

Don't be blue when the books come back and your piggy is empty. ISTOCK

Track It's important for students to keep track of how much and what they're spending their money on, especially if you go over budget.

Adjust "Remember that life is fluid and full of changes," says Snow. "Extra expenses and/or extra revenue streams can pop up. It's important to take this money into account and determine the best way to allocate it."

Tracking your toonies

Early childhood education student Patricia Alba on writing it all down:

- Alba advises students to keep an updated spreadsheet with a running total so spending can be easily tracked. There are also free online and mobile tools that allow you to track your spending, such as Mint.com.
- "Make a spreadsheet and remember to keep all of your receipts," she says. "This will definitely keep you organized and on top of your spending."

University of Waterloo life science student Jaynell Rosario worked part-time at a doctor's office during the day and as a soccer referee at night last summer. She says the best way she managed her money was immediately separating her paycheque into savings and spending the minute she was paid.

"When you get paid, divide your pay cheque into chunks. Still have fun, but save most of it because when the school year comes around you'll regret your summer overspending," she says. Snow suggests students check out student bank accounts with no monthly fees, or automatic saving programs that allow a fixed amount to be transferred from your chequing account to savings every time a debit transaction or ATM withdrawal is made. She says these can be helpful proactive tools for students to keep on top of managing their money.

Academic advice

"Still have fun, but save most of (your money) because when the school year comes around you'll regret your summer overspending."
Jaynell Rosario, Student

Making her summer budget planning a family affair is what Ryerson University early childhood education student Patricia Alba found helpful in keeping on top of her spending.

"I sat down with my parents and laid out how much tuition, books and transportation would cost, plus spending money to hang out with friends," she says. "It helped to have that discussion with them and get their feedback."

Splitting cash a sticking point as NHL labour talks resume

Hockey. Negotiations continue with current bargaining agreement set to expire Sept. 15

The NHL and the NHL Players' Association are set to resume labour talks on Wednesday at the league offices in New York.

Total revenue of the league's operations is the biggest sticking point right now, and it's an important one.

The players like their cut right now. The owners don't.

The two sides met last Friday in another round of negotiations for a new collective bargaining agreement.

There were multiple reports coming out of the last round of talks that the owners' offer included players' hockey-related revenues getting slashed from 57 per cent to 46 per cent. It also was reported players would be forced to wait 10 years before becoming unrestricted free agents and contracts would be limited to five years — a major change considering Zach Parise and Ryan Suter decided to sign matching 13-year, $98-million US contracts with the Minnesota Wild.

NHLPA executive director Donald Fehr and NHL deputy commissioner Bill Daly are among those meeting Wednesday. The two sides have regularly met since opening talks June 29.

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman said after Friday's session, "We've got a lot of work to do in a relatively short period of time."

Fehr said he didn't know what kind of short time frame Bettman was talking about.

"The optimum would be to get a deal done as soon as you could," Fehr said, adding he viewed a strike as a "last resort."

"What a last resort means is you bargain in good faith, you do everything you can, you listen carefully to what the other side says, you make counter-proposals when you can, where you believe it's consistent with the kind of contract you believe is appropriate, and you keep at it until you get an agreement," he said. Labour veteran

- Commissioner Gary Bettman oversaw the 1994-95 NHL lockout that forced a 48-game regular-season schedule.
- When labour problems lingered in 2004-05, Bettman shut down the league.

Jays lose to Yankees again without ailing Bautista

Andruw Jones of the Yankees hits a three-run homer during the second inning Tuesday in New York. The Yankees defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 6-1. The Jays' Jose Bautista is on the 15-day disabled list but was relieved to learn there's no structural damage in his ailing left wrist. He thinks he could return as soon as he's eligible, though manager John Farrell said it's too early to tell. Bautista left Monday night's game feeling pain in his wrist after hitting a foul ball in the eighth inning. The Jays called up Anthony Gose from triple-A Las Vegas to fill the roster spot. ## Cycling. Frank Schleck fails doping test at Tour

Frank Schleck of Luxembourg pulled out of the Tour de France and spent several hours in a police station in southwest France on Tuesday after failing a doping test.

The UCI said Schleck tested positive for a banned diuretic called Xipamide on July 14, another reminder of the doping cloud that has damaged the image of cycling — and its biggest event.

Scott Stevens, a longtime New Jersey captain and defenceman, was named an assistant coach by the Devils on Tuesday.

Stevens, who was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame in 2007, was the first player to have his jersey retired by the Devils. His No. 4 hangs from the rafters at the Prudential Center, next to Scott Niedermayer (No. 27) and Ken Daneyko (No. 3), also defencemen who joined Stevens in leading New Jersey to three Stanley Cup titles (1995, 2000, and 2003). ## NBA. Raptors unveil Kyle Lowry and Landry Fields Point guard Kyle Lowry and swingman Landry Fields were introduced at the Air Canada Centre in Toronto on Tuesday.

Raptors general manager Bryan Colangelo said they are "giving the keys" to Lowry with hopes that he can become the cornerstone of a young, emerging team.

Lowry was acquired last week in a trade with the Houston Rockets that saw forward Gary Forbes and a protected future first-round draft choice go the other way.

The Raptors haven't been to the playoffs since the 2007-08 season, and haven't progressed past the first round since a 2001 East semifinal against Philadelphia that Lowry called "one of the best series I've ever witnessed on TV, period."

Lowry said he and Fields will help the team's defensive makeover, something that head coach Dwane Casey started last season with promising results. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Rory McIlory is enjoying the approach to this year's British Open much more than last year, when Rorymania was at its peak. Back then, the curly-haired Northern Irishman was coming off his first major victory — a runaway at the U.S. Open — and being heralded as the new face of a game desperate to move past Tiger Woods' stunning downfall. But since his eight-stroke win at the U.S. Open, McIlroy hasn't been much of a factor in the majors. He is just 23 years old, and even now, while admittedly mired in a bit of a slump, he's holding down the No. 2 spot behind Luke Donald in the world rankings.

Aim getting better with age

Soccer. Canada's captain Sinclair developed her game while keeping up with big brother

Burnaby, B.C., native Christine Sinclair signs autographs after the championship game of the CONCACAF women's Olympic qualifying tournament against the United States at Vancouver's BC Place Stadium in January. RICH LAM/GETTY IMAGES

Whenever Mike Sinclair drives by the old house in Burnaby, B.C., he can't help but marvel at the fact it's still standing.

"It took a beating," Sinclair says with a laugh. "I don't know how it's still upright. But I guess that's what you get when you get two really competitive kids around the same age."

Those two kids were Mike and younger sister Christine, who would leave countless broken windows and scuffed walls in her wake en route to becoming Canada's finest women's soccer player.

"Oh God, our windows, our next-door neighbours' windows, the windows of our neighbours two houses down," he said. "We've broken more things."

The concrete basement floor of their three-bedroom house provided the perfect venue for everything from roller-hockey to golf to soccer.

Fast forward a couple of decades and Christine Sinclair's aim has definitely improved. The 29-year-old is Canada's leading goal-scorer and has the third-most international goals in women's soccer history, trailing Americans Mia Hamm and Abby Wambach.

She'll lead a squad that will be playing for a medal on sport's grandest stage — the No. 7 Canadians will open the London Olympic Games against third-ranked Japan on July 25.

Trying to keep up with her older brother on the streets and playgrounds over the years built a toughness in Sinclair that was well on display last summer, when the striker scored on a beautiful bending free kick against Germany at the women's World Cup moments after her nose was shattered. Canadian goalkeeper Erin McLeod said it looked "like a zigzag."

Her goal was the lone bright spot at an otherwise disastrous World Cup that saw the Canadians knocked out after the preliminary round without a win.

But Sinclair said spirits are high heading into London. The team hired Englishman John Herdman as head coach in the fall and went on to beat Brazil to win the Pan American Games in October.

With 12 returnees from the Beijing Olympic team, Sinclair said Canada will field a squad that is wiser from its experiences in China.

"It was the first time our soccer team had qualified, and none of us had been there before and we were all inexperienced," Sinclair said. "The Olympics can be overwhelming, but now that there's a core group of us who have been there before, we can sort of help the younger players know what to expect that we didn't know four years ago."

Such as not wasting energy chasing after superstar athletes.

"I remember our team four years ago trying to get pictures with people during times when normally in camp you'd be resting, lying in bed watching TV. But instead people were out stalking Lionel Messi and things like that. That needs to change." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Cup half empty

The Canadian women's team spent the past few months based in Vancouver, with training scheduled in three-week blocks with a week away in between to train at home.

- They spent several months before the World Cup in Rome, a grind that had players counting the days until they could go home.
- "Players were ready to go home.... That is not what your mindset should be at a World Cup or an Olympics," Sinclair said.

Basketball. London likely last hurrah for Canadian women's captain Gabriele

Every morning for the past several years, Teresa Gabriele has crawled out of bed in pitch darkness to stock bread.

The alarm rings at 3:45 a.m. and she's in her first store in Abbotsford, B.C., by 4:30, when most people are still fast asleep.

Not the most glamorous work for Canada's women's basketball captain, but her job with her family's bread business has allowed her to pursue her Olympic dreams — and her appearance in London will be the punctuation mark on an illustrious career.

The 32-year-old point guard from Mission, B.C., doesn't see her work as a sacrifice and scoffs at any suggestion she's put her life on hold.

Teresa Gabriele TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"This is my dream and what I love to do, so this is what I'm doing right now," Gabriele said after a practice Tuesday at the Air Canada Centre in Toronto.

Gabriele has been the mainstay of Canada's women's team for more than a decade, and is the only remaining player from the 2000 Sydney Games, the last time a Canadian basketball team has stepped onto sport's biggest stage.

"I'm thinking of retiring after this, so it's a storybook ending for me," Gabriele said. "I started my career very early with an Olympics and then to be able to end it with an Olympics, it's awesome."

The Canadians qualified for the Games at the 11th hour, beating Japan in a must-win game in a last-chance qualifier on Canada Day to earn the final berth.

"We were just telling everybody we wanted to qualify on Canada Day," Gabriele laughed about their nail-biting run through qualifying.

Yohan Blake warmed up for the London Olympics by timing 9.85 seconds to win the 100 metres at a meet Tuesday in Lucerne, Switzerland, his first competitive race since beating Usain Bolt twice at the Jamaican Olympic trials.

Blake was far from the fastest out of the blocks but powered through the field with legal wind assistance of 1.6 metres per second. Jamaica teammate Michael Frater was second in 10.

"Definitely I am on the right path for the Olympics," the 21-year-old world champion said. "This is where I am supposed to be. I want to remain unbeaten and that's what I am doing."

Rain may go away for Games opening

The sun may, just may, shine on the London Olympics.

The Met Office, which forecasts the weather in one of the world's most fickle climates, said Tuesday the rain that has soaked England for weeks and kept temperatures cool could give way to sunshine in time for the opening ceremony on July 27.

Apart from raining on London's parade, the weather has been worrying organizers of equestrian and rowing events, where venues have been waterlogged by weeks of constant rain.

Organizers insist early woes are minor, Games will be safe

Security. London Olympics head tries to put security shortage debacle 'in proportion'

London Games officials dismissed concerns Tuesday over a lost bus driver, a scramble for more security guards and some rain-soaked venues — embarrassments that had one tabloid newspaper headline using the Olympic rings to spell out the word "OOPS!"

Organizers said some of the complaints were exaggerated and tried to put the best face on the unfolding security debacle, as well as other concerns about the games, which start in 10 days.

"Let's put this in proportion," London Olympics head Sebastian Coe told reporters. "This has not, nor will it, impact on the safety and security of these games. That, of course, is our No. 1 priority."

His efforts were undercut in Parliament, where the chief executive of the G4S security group, Nick Buckles, acknowledged that his company's failure to recruit enough Olympic staff had embarrassed the entire nation. Some 3,500 British troops — including some just back from Afghanistan — had to be called in on short notice to fill the gap. Thousands more military personnel had already been assigned to the games.

Buckles gave a grovelling mea culpa on live TV as he was being questioned by angry lawmakers.

"It's a humiliating shambles for the country, isn't it?" asked Labour lawmaker David Winnick.

"I cannot disagree with you," Buckles said.

He was hard-pressed to explain why his company had failed to tell officials until only two weeks before the start of the games that its recruitment efforts had failed.

Some U.S. security and law enforcement officials had privately expressed concerns as early as last year that there might not be enough personnel for the London Games.

The FBI is sending about two dozen agents to London to work on Olympic security, according to two U.S. government officials. They spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to talk publicly about the plans.

G4S will pay for its mistake, saying it expects to lose between 35 million pounds and 50 million pounds ($55 million to $79 million) on the contract, which is about 12 per cent of its annual profit.

Transportation

Travel proves to be painful as athletes start to arrive

As the world's athletes flew into London on Monday — the first big day of Olympic arrivals — a few buses carrying them from Heathrow Airport took a wrong turn and got lost.

The lost buses — one carrying Americans, the other Australians — touched a nerve. From the very start, London organizers have feared repeating the transportation woes of 1996 in Atlanta, where one of the biggest problems was hiring bus drivers from outside the city who didn't know their way around.

Olympics head Sebastian Coe played down complaints about a miles-long traffic jam caused by the opening of the Olympic lane on the M4 highway from the airport into the city.

A fraudster has been jailed for a scam that offered young dance students fake places in the closing ceremony for the London Olympics.

Judge Sylvia De Bertodano sentenced Stephen Moonesamy to two years in prison. According to the BBC, the judge said he had "dashed more hopes than Simon Cowell."

Moonesamy was arrested in May after approaching three dance schools in Northampton, central England, claiming he was recruiting children aged nine to 19 to dance at the Games' Aug. 12 finale.

Detective superintendent Nick Downing said Tuesday that Moonesamy has "callously deceived around 75 youngsters" who had begun rehearsing for the event before the fraud was uncovered.

If you're not worried about fuel prices ...

Second Gear.
2006 to 2010
BMW M5

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
Drive@metronews.ca

From 2006 to 2010, the E60 generation of BMW's M5 sedan offered up a slew of performance upgrades to handle the 500-horsepower output of the most powerful factory 5-Series yet.

The M5 isn't a car for the faint of heart — and high fuel and insurance costs mean a more modest 5-Series model with a smaller engine may make more sense for most shoppers who don't require the services of one of the fastest four-door cars on the planet.

What Owners Like

The last-generation M5 was praised by its owners for looks, exclusivity, performance, thrills, comfort and a high-quality cabin. Supportive seats and the convenience of a sedan were also highly rated.

What Owners Dislike

Many owners report frustration with terrible fuel mileage, and a rough and awkward feel to the M5's SMG transmission.

Common Issues

Ensure all electronics on the M5 you're considering are working as expected. Note that reports of a 'frozen' iDrive central command system aren't uncommon. Watch for warning indicators that may become illuminated on your test-drive, especially pertaining to the SMG transmission, if so equipped.

A full check of the M5's various (and complicated) electronics systems by a BMW service centre is key to confidence ahead of a purchase.

TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Engine

The M5 came exclusively with a 5-litre V10 developing 500 horsepower. Manual or SMG transmissions were available, and all models were rear-wheel drive.

Verdict

Many of its owners will verify that the M5 isn't a car that's ideal for those after fantastic fuel consumption or inexpensive repair bills. However, as a four-door rocket-sedan, it has virtually no equals.

Are you ready if disaster strikes at the wheel?

Like any machine, cars have countless parts that can break, fail or malfunction. Gas pedals can stick, wheels can fall off, and that flimsy glass windshield can be shattered faster than you can blink.

And with Mother Nature's ability to put drivers in potentially-fatal situations in a heartbeat, driving quickly amounts to one of the riskiest things we do on a daily basis.

Question is: are you prepared if disaster strikes at the wheel?

Here's a look at how to maximize your chances of survival in three of the likeliest worst-case scenarios.

Problem: You've just passed a car on the highway and you discover your throttle is stuck to the floor. You start to panic, and speed is piling on dangerously.

Possible Solution: Forget turning off the engine. The first course of action is to slip the vehicle into neutral. Doing so takes half a second, and physically decouples the engine from the wheels. In neutral, your vehicle can't accelerate — no matter how hard the throttle is pressed.

Once in neutral, brake and coast off to the side of the road. Turn the engine off, fix the problem and carry on. If your car has a stick-shift, pressing the clutch has the same effect.

The Problem: You're travelling at speed when a piece of ice or debris from the roof of a transport truck becomes dislodged and strikes your windshield. There's broken glass in your eyes, and your vehicle is now a projectile with a blind pilot.

Possible Solution: Ian Law is the chief instructor of the ILR Car Control School. He's been teaching advanced safe driving techniques for years — and recommends a pre-emptive approach to successfully tackling a catastrophic non-visibility situation.

"This is a scenario where staying focused on your driving pays off in dividends. A good driver will have been focused on their driving and the situation before the incident. This is called "situational awareness," and it involves processing all driving information so that the driver knows at all times what is around them — and where".

Translation? Practice being aware of what's around you at all times, and you've got better odds of surviving blindness at the wheel.

The Problem: You're driving through very thick fog, and suddenly discover that you're mere seconds away from plowing head on into the back of a massive pile-up. You're driving too fast to stop.

Possible Solution: Getting your vehicle out of the roadway is likely to offer a higher chance of survival — so aim for the ditch, not the pile-up.

You and your passengers can more easily survive a single impact entering the ditch than the numerous impacts likely in a pile-up situation.

Law adds, "I always say you are much better off waiting three hours for a tow truck to pull you out of a ditch than waiting 20 minutes to have the paramedics pull your body out of the wreckage."

New record for motorcycles at Dover

Autopilot

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

Are you superstitious? I think I'm regular-stitious. I walk under ladders, but never carrying a black cat. Motorcyclists seem to be incredibly non superstitious. They think that the most superstitious date on the calendar — Friday the 13th — is the absolute bomb.

It's been a tradition since 1981 to drive your motorcycle to the resort town of Port Dover, Ont., on the shores of Lake Erie, every Friday the 13th, regardless of which month it falls on.

Every year it gets bigger, even the years when the "Black Fridays" show up on cooler months. With the last Friday the 13th of 2012 happening in July, and hot weather on the forecast, many predicted that this would be the biggest turnout ever. And it was.

About 50,000 motorcycles and 150,000 people were the numbers I heard repeatedly. I didn't actually count all the bikes and on-lookers clogging the streets of Dover, because I was too busy getting heat stroke, or what I thought was heat stroke. Turns out I was instantly cured by an adult beverage and some pan-fried Perch at the Erie Beach Hotel. But suffice to say, you couldn't swing a stuffed animal, like say a cat, without hitting leather, chrome, or a large person with a bandana. So I didn't.

Funnily enough, our gang didn't arrive at Dover via bikes, or via cars. Our pal Kirby hosted us in nearby St. Williams, and dropped us off by boat. Great fun but I wouldn't necessarily recommend the water route, as dock space on that day is super tight. But with so many people on the pier looking at every boat coming into the marina, I can now appreciate how Queen Elizabeth felt on her Jubilee tour down the Thames.

It was my first Friday the 13th at Port Dover. Here are a few impressions and observations of the day, from this rookie attendee.

• Very hot and humid, saved only by a slight breeze.

• Did I mention it was hot?

• A warm day meant a lot of skin was uncovered. As usual, this is good and bad.

• The vibe was awesome. All those bikes and all those people and all that heat and nobody was cranky or pushy.

• The cruiser crowd, which prefers leather and Harley Davidson motorcycles, are definitely the majority, but there was solid representation from all motorcycle genres — sport bikes, vintage, touring, standards, trikes, etc.

• Huge police presence. But they didn't seem to have much to do, other than direct traffic.

• Port-a-potties and hot sun? Not a good combination.

• Very well organized. Only bikes allowed into and out of town by one road, and under the control of those efficient and courteous police officers. People arriving by car have to park way out of town, in a designated farmer's field, and then get shuttled by school bus.

• Hundreds of bikes rolling into, or out of town, en masse, makes for great mechanical theatre — lots of flashy visuals, amazing soundtrack.

Create your own two-wheel diaries with good planning

Be sure to check road conditions before you head out on your journey. NEWS CANADA

There's nothing like the beautiful Canadian summer landscape to inspire a motorcycle trip on the open road. Before you head out to make memories on a cross-country journey, consider the following safety tips from TD Insurance:

Plan ahead
Following the open road is no doubt appealing, but choosing your route ahead of time will ensure a safer ride. Plan your time and distance, so at the end of the day you have a comfortable place to eat and stay. Be sure to check road conditions in advance — paved roads are safer than dirt roads.

Gear up
Make sure you and your bike are in peak condition. You'll be riding for long periods of time, so core muscle strength and a top performing bike are important. Also, make sure you have the proper attire for venturing from coast to coast. Bright colours will increase your visibility to other motorists, and proper motorcycle riding gear will protect you from debris.

Rest accordingly
Traffic and weather may steer you off course and add stress to your travels, so remember to allow ample time to reach your destination. Take a break along the way — you'll have a more enjoyable trip if you stop to smell the roses.

Check your insurance
Before you embark on your adventure, check your motorcycle and travel medical insurance policies to avoid any unwanted surprises. Remember that your province's health insurance plan may not cover you on out-of-province excursions even within Canada. # Michelin's 'communicating' tires tell their tales

Driving Force. New system, which increases safety, to debut just in time for London Games

It's dangerous to have low air pressure in a tire. The tire will run much hotter, which can potentially lead to a blow-out — and on a vehicle such as a bus, that could put many lives in danger. Maintenance crews normally check each truck or bus tire manually, but a new system from Michelin lets an operator instantly obtain all the necessary information just by stopping by with a handheld device.

These "communicating tires" use the combined technologies of a tire pressure monitoring system (TPMS) and radio frequency identification (RFID) chip to collect and forward the information.

They'll debut this summer on buses at the Olympic Games in London, England.

"This system allows a fleet to monitor tires just by walking by the tires with the sensor picking up the information through the RFID," says Francois Beauchamp, manager of the Field Engineering Group for Michelin Canada. There's no word yet on whether the system will come to Canada.

The components in the tire aren't new. Many passenger cars now come equipped with TPMS, which warns the driver when the air pressure in a tire is low. Some tires also contain RFID chips, primarily for inventory. However, Michelin says it is the first to combine them into a "full-fledged ecosystem" that instantly provides such information as the tire's identification number, when it was manufactured, when it was put on a vehicle, and its air pressure and temperature.

The chip is built into the tire and stays with it during its lifetime. Some of its information can also be updated, such as when the tire is retreaded. The chips do not contain batteries, but are powered by electromagnetic waves when the scanner collects their data.

Michelin estimates that it takes about 15 minutes to manually identify a commercial tire and check its pressure, and that this instant readout system will leave operators more time for visual inspections and tread depth checks. It also enables crews to easily verify the identification and age of the inside tires on buses with dual rear wheels, where that information — which is molded into the side of the tire — is hidden by the outer tires.

"Monitoring the tire pressure and temperature is related to safety, because in the transit community, you're transporting people," Beauchamp says. "You also achieve better maintenance of your fleet, which in turn gives you better fuel economy and fewer emissions."

Tire facts

- Safety. In future, sensors could be installed at bus stops or other city points, which would "read" the information on communicating tires and instantly spot any potentially unsafe ones.
- Validation. Michelin's communicating tires took 7 years to develop and validate, and are covered by 20 families of patents.
- Future. By the end of 2012, some 1,200 communicating tires will have been installed on London buses.

Temptation will come knocking today. Do you answer the door and let it in or do you call on all your powers of self-control and ignore it? Only you can decide, but consider this: Is enjoying yourself really a sin?

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You may find it hard to control your emotions today. Pluto, planet of extremes, will make you a bit touchy and maybe a bit jealous too. So, watch you don't go over the top and say something you'll later regret.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Someone you work with seems determined to find fault with everything you do and it's getting you down. All you can do is sit tight and wait for him or her to get fed up with his or her carping.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
Close your ears to gossip because hardly any of what you hear today will be true. Someone is trying to poison your mind against a person you have known and trusted for years. Don't fall for it.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Steer clear of a feud that is none of your business. If you get involved, it will make it appear you have taken sides. Before you know it, you'll be involved in a war of words no one can win.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
The more others say you need to make changes, the more you must resist. This is not the right time to throw everything up in the air. That applies as much to your personal life as it does to your career.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Something you have grown used to over the years will go out of your life today but that's good because it has been taking up more time and space than it deserves. Make room for new things.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Don't be silly and make promises you might want to back out of later on. And don't use emotional blackmail to get what it is you most desire. What will you do if your bluff is called?

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Both at home and at work you should strive for a more relaxed and forgiving attitude today — not because others deserve to be forgiven but because it will be you who suffers most if you get uptight.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If things don't work out the way you plan today, chances are it's only a temporary setback. There's no need to panic. Have more patience with yourself and, most importantly, think long-term in everything you do.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb 19
No matter how much others may say you should loosen the purse strings, you know it's the wrong thing to do. Luxury items must stay off your shopping list until such time as you can afford them.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Passions will be running high today, so think before you act both at home and at work. If someone in your family does not like the friends you hang out with come right out and ask them why. SALLY BROMPTON
